As you move from the formal 'hot' and 'cool' herbaceous borders around the lawn, the design becomes more contemporary and the planting less formal. Meandering paths tempt the visitor in varied directions, each revealing another space, a different planting style and a change of mood. All the family will enjoy.

Alfred Cochrane's garden with its gothic architectural features, was set out in the mid-1980s to enhance an early 19th Century arboretum. A designer's garden, it juxtaposes specimens from both hemispheres to create for some, a romantic fantasy and for others, a Secret Garden.

Hunting Brook

Lamb Hill, Blessington, Co. Wicklow, W91 YK33

M: +353 (0)87 285 6601

E: jimi@huntingbrook.com

Hunting Brook Gardens, home to Jimi Blake, is set in the foothills of the Wicklow Mountains. This garden is famous for its borders, which are a modern fusion of prairie and tropical planting. The constant changing palette of plants, reflects Jimi's unbounded enthusiasm for creative gardening. Hunting Brook has one of Ireland's largest private collections of plants and there are many examples of the fiercely colourful, large-scale planting combinations for which Jimi has become so well-known.

Weston Park

22 Weston Park, Churchtown, Dublin 14, D14 XC79

M: +353 (0)87 285 3834

E: olivefitzpatrick@eircom.net

Olive's garden is set behind a semi-detached house in the south Dublin suburb of Churchtown. Plantings of bamboo, tree ferns, Tetrapanax, Trachycarpus and large leaved hostas help to give the garden its tropical feel. Sporadic plantings of herbaceous perennials break the green pallet and give the garden some restful colour.
